Art Unit: 1743

1. Claims 1-39 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.
2. In claim 1, next to last line, it is unclear whether "a positioner" is the same positioner as recited in the preamble and line 4, or in addition to the previously recited positioner.
3. Claims 1-25, 28-39 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Feygin. (5,957,167)
4. Feygin teaches a method and apparatus for printing biological substances on a substrate. A capillary tube with a slit in it (slit not precluded by the instant claims) can be decelerated to print a droplet (col. 3, line 23). A spring biasing device is shown in Figure 7. Plural dispensing members and automated operation are taught (col. 5, lines 55-65). With respect to reservoirs, the upper, expanded end of the capillary is a reservoir; alternatively, the source well into which the capillary device is dipped for loading is a non-capillary reservoir in fluid contact with the capillary during loading.
5. Feygin fails to explicitly teach a positioner for moving the printer relative to the substrate.
6. It would have been obvious to provide positioners and other known moving expedients in order to automate the system as taught by Feygin. With respect to "wire bonding capillary" in that applicant has disclosed no special properties of wire bonding capillaries defining over ordinary capillaries, it is the examiner's position that the capillaries of Feygin are structurally capable of use as wire bonding capillaries and/or constitute wire bonding capillaries to the extent the term is definite. Element 718 constitutes the instant nozzle surface. It would have been obvious to make the gang of devices of a single material for reproducibility of delivery, and of known materials for their known strength and inertness. It would have been obvious to space the devices for insertion into known well plates. It would have been obvious to make the heads replaceable in order to remove damaged or contaminated heads as was known in the printer and pipetting art.

7. Claims 26-27 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Feygin as applied to claims 1-25, 28-39 above and further in view of Thomas.

8. Feygin fails to teach the preservative.

9. Thomas teaches a reagent transfer device having a resilient rubber pad which is abutted with the transfer device outlet opening to prevent evaporation from the device during storage (col. 3, lines 59-64).

10. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to provide an evaporation prevention device such as a rubber pad for abutting the capillary openings in the device of Feygin in order to prevent evaporation of reagents from the openings during storage as taught by Thomas.

11. Applicant's arguments filed November 4, 2003 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.

12. The rejection under 35 USC 112, first paragraph is overcome by virtue of the amendment to claim 1. Claim 1 no longer requires that both ends of the capillary be open to atmosphere.

Art Unit: 1743

13. Applicant argues that Feygin does not teach printing from a surface of fixed, integrated nozzles, but, e.g., Figure 7 of Feygin shows nozzles 300a-c fixed to plate 718 with decelerating positioner 714a-b.

14. Applicant's amendment necessitated the new ground(s) of rejection presented in this Office action. Accordingly, THIS ACTION IS MADE FINAL. See MPEP § 706.07(a). Applicant is reminded of the extension of time policy as set forth in 37 CFR 1.136(a).

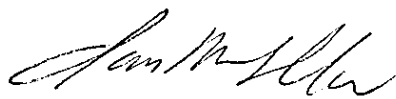

15. A shortened statutory period for reply to this final action is set to expire THREE MONTHS from the mailing date of this action. In the event a first reply is filed within TWO MONTHS of the mailing date of this final action and the advisory action is not mailed until after the end of the THREE-MONTH shortened statutory period, then the shortened statutory period will expire on the date the advisory action is mailed, and any extension fee pursuant to 37 CFR 1.136(a) will be calculated from the mailing date of the advisory action. In no event, however, will the statutory period for reply expire later than SIX MONTHS from the date of this final action.
